

This impressive volume seeks to test and assess the hypothesis that the metanarrative of exile and restoration—popularized by Ben Meyer, E. P. Sanders, and N. T. Wright—is significant for Jewish and early Christian thought. The author concludes that such a restoration eschatological perspective is not only present, but is quite pervasive in the NT. Following an introduction that discusses the importance of narrative as methodology as well as recent narrative approaches to the NT, Eskola surveys restoration eschatology in OT and early Jewish literature and then examines the paradigm of exile and restoration in the message of Jesus and the synoptic gospels. The book proceeds next to examine the book of Acts (“The teaching of earliest Christianity”), followed by “Paul the theologian,” and then the later NT writings (“Jewish Christianity”), including Hebrews, James, the Petrine Epistles, the Gospel and First Epistle of John, and Revelation. What Eskola has achieved here can hardly be overstated. In this book he has managed to provide a coherent theological reading of nearly the entire NT within a framework derived from the literature that resourced and was contemporaneous with those earliest Christian writings. To be sure, this book is not light reading. Eskola is thorough in his analysis of the various texts of the NT, which can cause the reader occasionally to lose the forest for the trees. For this reason, an abridged version of this book would serve the academy well. Still, teachers and researchers will learn much from this volume.

John K. Goodrich
Moody Bible Institute

History of Christianity: Early

MODELS OF VIRTUE. THE ROLES OF VIRTUES IN SERMON AND HAGIOGRAPHY FOR NEW SAINTS’ CULT (13TH TO 15TH CENTURY). Edited by Eleonora Lombardo. Centro Studi Antoniani, 57. Padova, Italy: Centro Studi Antoniani, 2016. Pp. x + 326. Paperback, $55.00.

This collection of fourteen essays in French, English, Italian, and Portuguese, introduced by Eleonora Lombardo and postfaced by Antonio Rigon, stems from the eponymous conference held in Porto (2013). Centered on the place of virtues in the new cults of medieval saints and providing varied examples from most parts of Europe, it takes a fresh look on the question of virtues in hagiography and preaching in light of recent scholarship. Nicole Bériou, studying saints’ virtues in the sermons of Federico Visconti (1253–1277), notes that a loving relationship with the saints remains central. Franco Morenzoni explores the facets of Thomas Becket in sermons dedicated to the martyr: alter Christus, virtuous, and exemplary prelate. André Vauchez studies virtues in the writings of Saint Francis and thirteenth-century Franciscan hagiography, showing a shift of focus from wisdom to poverty. Eleonora Lombardo depicts Anthony of Padua as a model of virtues, especially Wisdom, for the Franciscans. Alison More draws the evolution of the cult of Clare of Assisi. Giovanni Paolo Maggioni studies the different images of Peter Martyr in the two versions of the De sanctis collection by Iacobus de Voragine. Stanislava Kuzmová shows how Stanislaus of Cracow is presented as a model of virtues, especially to clerics. Sophie Delmas describes how preachers depict Louis d’Anjou, between Franciscan, episcopal, and princely virtues. Aires Nascimento is concerned with a lay Portuguese saint, Nuno de Santa Maria. Maria de Lurdes Rosa studies the virtues attributed by Duarte, king of Portugal, to his late father king João, in sermon guidelines for his funerals (1433). Isabel Rosa Dias gives an edition and commentary of a sermon on Franciscan protomartyrs by Pelbart of Themeswar, where obedience is considered as the source of all virtues. Valentina Berardini shows that Saint Dominic’s celebration in fifteenth-century sermons was coherent with his “official” image as a champion of apostolic life and doctrine. Pietro Delcorno studies how Bernardino da Siena was presented as both a perfect preacher and a perfect layman, guided by piety and charity. Paula Almeida Mendes focuses on the virtues required in beatification and canonization procedures in seventeenth- to eighteenth-century Portugal.

Marjorie Burghart
Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique

IMMAGINI DEI PREDICATORI E DELLA PREDICAZIONE IN ITALIA ALLA FINE DEL MEDIOEVO.

Roberto Rusconi. Medioevo francescano—Saggi, 17. Spoleto, Italy: Fondazione Centro Italiano di Studi sull’Alto Medioevo, 2016. Pp. xxxviii + 516. Paperback, $60.00.

This book collects 15 major articles by Roberto Rusconi initially published between 1985 and 2008, which represents only a fraction of the vast bibliography of this great scholar and specialist of Franciscanism (303 entries to date). The selected articles are organized in four sections. The first, titled “In principio,” comprises three articles, “Forma apostolorum . . .,” “Reportatio” and “Trasse la storia per farne la tavola . . .,” published, respectively in 1985, 1989, and 1995. They focus on the image of preachers in the textual and iconographic sources of the twelfth to fourth century, especially the mendicant orders. The second section, “La rappresentazione delle prediche,” contains three articles focusing on the representation of preaching in fifteenth-century Italy, and drawing heavily on iconographic sources. “Predicó in piazza . . .” (1989) is centered on the political context of preaching in Umbria; “Le pouvoir de la parole . . .” (1997) discusses the growing interest in Italian art for the representation of preachers, who are often depicted as saints. Finally, “Immagini di predicatori e scene di predicazione . . .” (2001) examines the work and influence of Savonarola (Girolamo da Ferrara) in the light of artistic production. The third section, “La santità dei predicatori,” continues the exploration of the figure of preachers as saints with five articles. "The Preacher Saint in Late Medieval Italian Art" (2002) sets the general landscape. It is followed by studies of particular figures: Giovanni da Capestrano (1989), Vicent Ferrer (two distinct articles, 1989 and 2008), and San Pietro (martire) da Verona (2005). The last section, "Percorsi," presents four articles. They discuss preaching in relation with seemingly marginal groups: heretics ("I 'falsi credentes' . . .," 1993), women ("Women's Sermons at the End of the Middle Ages . . .," 1998), or Jews ("Anti-Jewish Preaching . . .," 2004), while an article presents examples of propaganda and satire in early printed devotional literature ("La predicazione fra propaganda e satira . . .," 1996). If one may regret a relative lack of contextualization, with only a short general introduction by the author, this collection is a must-read for all specialists of the field.

Marjorie Burghart

Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique

History of Christianity: Modern/Global

REFORMATORISCHE THEOLOGIE UND AUTORITÄTEN. STUDIEN ZUR GENESE DES SCHRIFTPRINZIPS BEIM JUNGEN LUTHER [REFORMATION THEOLOGY AND AUTHORITIES. STUDIES ON THE GENESIS OF THE SCRIPTURAL PRINCIPLE WITH THE YOUNG LUTHER]. Edited by Volker Leppin. Spätmittelalter, Humanismus, Reformation, 85. Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2015. Pp. viii + 310. €99.00.

Volker Leppin (Professor of Church History at the University of Tübingen) has offered a significant contribution to the general debate about the emergence of Protestant theology and specifically its relationship to late medieval theological disputes. This collection of eight essays from various authors adds a new dimension to this discussion in that it analyzes the specific issue of authority in theology and shows how the idea of scriptural authority emerged and influenced Protestant theology and ecclesial institutions. The volume is a product of a working group from the International Congress for Luther Research in Helsinki in 2012. Specifically, they focus on the issue of Luther's relationship to the church fathers, the scriptures, and canon law. As the authors in this volume show, the theological profile of the Reformation traditions moved away from conceptions of authority in the Middle Ages and sought to establish a new scheme of hierarchy with the Bible as the supreme instance of authority. One essay in the volume has also reopened an old debate about a possible point of transition in Luther's theology, specifically with regard to his reading of Augustine's anti-Pelagian writings. The volume provides groundbreaking research on the history of the Reformation and its various theologies.

Paul Silas Peterson

University of Tübingen

T&T CLARK COMPANION TO NONCONFORMITY.

Edited by Robert Pope. T&T Clark Companions in Theology and Biblical Studies. London: Bloomsbury, 2013. Pp. x + 751. £100.00.

Robert Pope (Reader in Theology at the University of Wales) has provided the academic community with a massive reference work for all things related to Protestant Nonconformity (Congregationalists, Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Unitarians, and many other religious communities) in England and Wales from the 1600s to today. The Companion is comprised of twenty-three essays on themes of nonconformist culture, theologies, understandings of the conscience, the Bible, homiletics, liturgy, architecture, home and family life, educational theories, institutions, mission (home and overseas), business leaders, labor movements, and ecumenical relationships. It also includes a comprehensive section titled "ABC of Nonconformity" (535–710). Here virtually every major figure and theme is given a page or two of scholarly introduction and explanation, from the Act of Uniformity to George Whitefield. The excellent authors in the volume speak to all the major research questions in this field. As such, this volume is an indispensable resource for both general background information and the current state of academic discourse on these various expressions of Christianity. This is all the more important today as various forms of these Protestant Nonconformity traditions are still thriving today. Pope's volume helps us to understand who the major personalities of these movements were, why these religious communities formed and, perhaps most importantly, what they believe.

Paul Silas Peterson

University of Tübingen

JAN HUS—600 JAHRE ERSTE REFORMATION [JAN HUS: 600 YEARS SINCE THE FIRST REFORMATION].

Edited by Andrea Strübind and Tobias Weger. Schriften des Bundesinstituts für Kultur und Geschichte der Deutschen im östlichen Europa 60. Pp. 265. Munich: De Gruyter Oldenbourg, 2015. 39,95€/56.00/£29.99.

This fine volume of ten essays with an introduction has revisited one of the most important reform figures of the late Middle Ages, whose legacy with regard to the Wittenberg Reformation a century later remains controversial. The collection is split into three parts. The first part addresses the historical-theological presentation of Jan Hus with three essays. The second part addressed the reception and influence of Hus with another three essays. The final part, with four essays, addresses the cultural memory of Hus and the culture of remembering him. The brief introduction presents the complicated and controversial situation from which the volume emerged, namely the dispute about the 500th anniversary of the Reformation (dated with Luther in Wittenberg). The authors in this